It may be that our friends have concluded that a newspaper can be run without money, and we must confess that present appearances do make it look as if they had really come to that conclusion. We would like to disabuse their minds in this regard, however, and would seriously remind them that it does take money to run a newspaper, also a good deal of it, and that cash down every week. Just at this time we need a little more than usual, but our receipts are working just the other way, and we are getting less. Our people have been blessed with good crops of all kinds, and in their prosperity should not forget their obligations to the printer. We therefore hope they will heed this gentle reminder, and call at the Spirit office and settle their dues.
